

Thinking about earning a PhD?

THINK IOWA!

The Communication Sciences and Disorders (CSD) Department at the University of Iowa is among the oldest, largest, and most highly respected departments in speech, language, and hearing sciences. Iowa's CSD faculty are leaders in the profession with strong collaborations within the department, across Iowa's campus, and outside the university.

While admission to the CSD PhD program is competitive, successful candidates are assured of funding for at least four years, which includes tuition, a stipend, and generous benefits.

PhD programs are tailored to meet the needs and interests of each student. Graduates leave with strong research skills and valuable teaching experience. Many have published peer-reviewed articles in high-impact scientific journals and successfully secured external funding.

Graduates from our PhD program are actively recruited, and many go on to distinguished careers in academia, industry, and health-care settings.
